Last month, I was responsible of organising a three-day conference in Prague. Before the event, I booked an accommodation near the station for the visiting speakers. On the first morning, I assisted a meeting with several international clients. We had to do a decision about the schedule before lunch. The keynote speaker arrived lately, so we started the next session without her. During the networking dinner, I was introduced with a software designer from Berlin. The hotel staff were very comprehensive when we asked to change rooms. By the end of the trip, I had learned how to cope up with several unexpected problems.
